PEOPLE ARE BUSY PREPARING FOR THE SUMMER OUTING.

Where Some Families Will Spend the Hot Months—An Ideal Farm-house Longed For.

This is the season when preparations are going forward with considerable energy in the region of the modiste's and in the private sewing rooms. Millady is getting ready for her summer outing, and she is doing it with less talk than usual. By the 1st of June it is generally known where many will be for the hot months. With the exception of the many who are going to Europe and a few who have taken cottages, the short vacation is not quite decided. It has been a wonder for several weeks why so many were going to Europe this summer instead of next. For several years the question has been, "Are you going to Europe in 1900?" There may be many who are going next year, but Indianapolis will contribute a reasonable number of tourists to Great Britain and the continent within the next three months. There is quite a little colony of Hoosiers in Europe now, with more en route, and still there are more to follow. One woman has made arrangements to go to the seashore to remain until October, and she feels herself fortunate in securing the last available room at a certain hotel where she planned to be a guest. Another family will go to the mountains of Virginia and be within an accessible distance of a large city where her husband's business will take him for a part of the time. Another family will be at home in a cottage in the Catskill mountains, which is away from everybody and everything, and where they expect to enjoy the summer in a truly unconventional way. No one is to be taken for granted, only those for use. The family servants will go, and books, hammocks and enough things for comfort will be taken. The children expect to do something in the way of nature study, but the real hope is relaxation. The minister and school teachers will spread over the land from sea to sea, and not a few will be found with passports to a foreign land. Many would like to go to one of the ideal places, but too seldom realized to be known by the many. This is the farmhouse which has a bathroom, screens at the windows and doors, plenty of hammocks and shade, good driving horses, roads for wheeling, nice picnic places, a table with plenty of dainty and garden produce and a rustic country cook, who knows how to fry chicken and make biscuits that melt in the mouth and where there is a large variety with plenty of ice. Such a place is to dream about, but it is the place that might carry almost any price for the privilege of having a house full of summer boarders. The vacation subject is a weighty one for a person who really needs it, but who has a slim purse. The men and women in badly ventilated stores and workrooms are the ones who need the fresh air, the country air and the sea and mountain air, but they are the last to get it. But just at this season, next to the gossip, is the subject of vacations.

The sequel to a smart luncheon given at a fashionable restaurant a short time ago as a farewell to a well-known woman who had been spending some time in the city, is just now being told and is interesting enough to bear repetition. It points a moral all too obvious. The luncheon was for a dozen people, and the one who was to have given it lives in the suburbs. The day was the day set for the departure of the visitor, and the hour for the feast one sufficiently in advance of train time to allow for the disposition of a liberal repast. With the hour arrived the ladies, all but the hostess. It was unfortunate that she was not punctual, but a little delay would not have mattered, but when she came she was in a hurry and no hostess put in an appearance, a little consternation could not be helped. The consternation was not helped by the fact that a telegram addressed to one of the ladies of the party and proving to be from the lady hostess, was not opened until it was too late to get into town. "Very well," the recipient of the telegram thought, "I will order the meal myself." Calling the major domo of the restaurant she told him to serve the luncheon, to be sure, Mrs. So and So had ordered. "Last Mrs. So and So had ordered, no luncheon at all the day before," said the major domo, "Very well, then," said the lady, "serve a luncheon for twelve and serve it quickly." It was hurried, of course, but the guest of honor had no notion of how near she had come to being compelled to start for Boston luncheonless and to dine at the pseudo-hostess paid the bill. But next day, for the next, nor the next after that, saw word from the lady in the suburbs. A week passed, and still nothing came. Then, meeting the husband by chance the next day, she told him of the occurrence, putting in some expressions of opinion, which, in a newspaper story, would have been set in bold type, and called "pepper." The result was a bunch of roses and a mere request that the bill be sent to the town and country from the lady in the suburbs. A week passed, and still nothing came. During a wedding breakfast to which a mere handful of guests had been bidden last week, the bride's health was proposed in the usual flowery terms. After the ceremony had been duly performed, the speaker said: "And that this beaker," holding up a fragile, thin-stemmed glass, "may never be de-livered to any less gracious lady for the low old fashion and shatter it while it glows with the recollection of the poetic service it has just performed." The bride's hand, and the "beaker" scattered in tinkling fragments on the table.

That glass, remarked the bride's mother later, "was the last of six that have been handed down in the family for almost a hundred years. I knew a Mrs. Hays in the city who would be 'unlucky'!"—Philadelphia Times.

The Most Perfectly Made Food for Human Use.

TO KEEP FOOD CRISP

A novel way of opening a package of food is shown on the Grape-Nuts package, where a line indicates that the nut should be made with a knife, and the package squeezed, which makes it snap enough to pour out what is needed for a meal, then the package automatically closes, preserving the contents from the moisture of the air.

As a rule, Grape-Nuts packages are not kept on hand very long in any family, but it is well to know how to keep the contents of the package in prime condition. Grape-Nuts are ready cooked, very crisp, and can be served immediately with a little good cream or milk. This feature is of great advantage to those who appreciate ease and convenience in preparing breakfast.
